CEO ENDS A SUCCESSFUL TENURE WITH TCTA

Today, the Board of the Trans-Caledon Tunnel Authority (TCTA) announced that the Chief Executive Officer, Mr James Ndlovu, is leaving the organisation due to his contract having come to an end, after two terms in office (eight years).

The Chairperson of the TCTA Board, Ms Monhla Hlahla, said that Mr Ndlovu has served the organisation with distinction since joining it in November 2008.

During his tenure, the TCTA expanded its project portfolio significantly, growing from two to eleven projects. Also, the organisation diversified its project mix from its original focus on building large dams and inter-basin transfer pipelines to implementing small-scale community water supply schemes and the treatment of acid mine drainage (AMD).

Under his leadership, TCTA has vigorously implemented an enterprise development programme, centered on enhancing the capacity of black-owned enterprises and on creating strong and sustainable communities.

“Mr Ndlovu leaves this organisation in a great state; he should be very proud of what he has achieved here”, said Ms Hlahla.

The Board is pleased to announce that, Mr Leonard Radzuma, currently the Chief Risk Officer, is the acting CEO, with effect from 1 November 2016. The appointment will ensure continuity and stability in the organization.

The Board of TCTA will be going on a drive to find a permanent replacement CEO, a process that is anticipated to take a few months.

“We thank Mr Ndlovu for his sterling work over the past eight years.”
